Log College Middle School students kicked off the 2016-17 academic year Tuesday morning at the school in Warminster. In the coming days, they will begin taking turns using recently purchased iPads. The Centennial School District spent almost $500,000 on 1,000 iPads and related costs to provide students in all Centennial schools with access to the educational tools. The iPads will be used only in the schools at this stage of the district's technology program, said Christopher Berdnik, Centennial's chief financial officer. The district also recently spent almost $80,000 to buy Chromebooks and pay for their related expenses to deploy to the district's William Tennent High School, and Log College and Klinger middle schools, he said.
